Foreword

From the perspective of Indigenous peoples, cultural heritage is a holistic concept, which is founded on the material, cultural, and spiritual values and includes the collective. Cultural heritage includes over generationally accumulated knowledge and practices, which are expressed, shared, and (re)lived in language, livelihoods, literature and arts, ceremonies, cosmos, and nature, as well as in human and non-human blessings. Cultural heritage is connected to the sovereignty of Indigenous peoples and with their near relations with lands, places and nature resources.

In this special issue it will be highlighted, how cultural heritage is vitalized and revitalized and taken into account in the current practices of different contexts and activities of the Sámi society, as in the museum, education, and research. There are two scientific articles and presentations, which were held at the launch of Indigenous Research Methodologies in Sámi and Global Contexts on May, 20th 2021 in Tiedekulma, at the University of Helsinki.

The article of Hanna Helander, Pigga Keskitalo, Sirkka Sanila and Sonja Moshnikoff is published in three languages, North Sámi, Skolt Sámi and Finnish. The article is an investigation of utilizing storytelling in distance learning of the Skolt Sámi language. Storytelling is a traditional way of teaching, which strengthens the cultural identity and belonging of the children. Storytelling innovation, as the writers call their method, is able to meet the challenges of a diasporic teaching situation, strengthening children's participation in language, culture and community while also alleviating some of the shortage of learning materials.

Jelena Porsanger's article, An Indigenous Sámi museum and repatriation on a Sámi drum from the XVII century, investigates the process of and the decision by the Danish authorities to repatriate Paul-Ánde's drum to Kárášjohka. The research note offers the readers information about the history and the path of the drum and considers the problematics of repatriation of ceremonial objects of Indigenous cultural heritage in a wider Nordic and international context of museums and cultural heritage politics.

In addition to the articles, presentations held in English in the book launch of Indigenous Research Methodologies in Sámi and Global Contexts, at the University of Helsinki Think Corner, May, 20th 2021 have been translated into North Sámi (translator: Irja Seurujärvi-Kari).
